Shattered dreams might become Neesa's greatest gift.

All Neesa ever wanted was a family of her own. After learning she can't have children, grief-stricken Neesa sells her farm, packs up, and leaves to travel the world. She hopes to find a way to heal, and discover a different destiny than what she'd once planned for herself.

Sterling Rush, billionaire, desires a new future of his own. When chasing the almighty dollar loses its appeal, he sells his company and settles on a quiet island in Fiji. For more than a year he peacefully idles away, until his ex-wife drops his surly teenage kids at his estate for their summer break. Tranquility demolished, Sterling has no idea how to connect with his estranged son and daughter. It looks like it will be a long, uncomfortable summer, until ...

Neesa lands on an enchanting island in Fiji, and senses that it's something special. After she meets handsome, older man Sterling Rush, she decides to stay for a while. He rents her his charming beachside cottage, and she's hardly moved in before a precocious, young Fijian girl shows up on her doorstep seeking work. Who is this girl and where did she come from? And why does a seven-year-old need a job?

Together, Neesa and Sterling will have to navigate unknown relationship waters. And they'll need extra determination when a multitude of Joneses, including the indomitable Great Aunt Elfleda, invade the island to meddle in their budding romance.

In the end, these complications might be a gift beyond measure. Neesa and Sterling could discover that sometimes, the family we thought we wanted, isn't the family we need.

A romance with a touch of steam, this is a standalone sequel to "Billionaires Don't Like Nice Girls" and "Two Heirs for the Billionaire."
