Soul of America Not for Sale: An Immigrant's Critique on the Contemporary American Scene

Theodore V. Christudoss

'Soul of America Not for Sale' is a literary piece of non-fiction genre. It is an immigrant's critique on the contemporary American scene. It is a collection of essays dealing with various issues that are hotly discussed and debated in and relevant to America today, issues such as whether the Supreme Court of America is unbiased or otherwise, financial meltdown, abortion (pro-life or pro-choice), divorce, homosexuality, racial conflicts, staggering unemployment, illegal immigration, crumbling infrastructure, status of family and marriage in a fast changing cultural milieu, chaotic healthcare, violence and gun control, hate crimes, pluralism and tolerance in American society, church and child abuse and celibacy, future of organized religion, terrorism and its ramifications, the role of whistle blowers, culture conflicts and cultural compatibility etc. climaxing with a glimpse into the far distant future. Though not voluminous each chapter takes up the issues, throws light on them through experiential episodes and illustrations and discusses them seriously presenting the readers with enough food for thought and a praxis for action. There is a diagnosis, prognosis and a praxis. There can be no doubt that this will engage the attention of the discerning American public in a way that will provoke them not only to think about all these issues seriously but also motivate them to do something about it here and now so that the next generation will inherit a better world which is their right. This is on the verge of publication.
