There are many resources available that cover these topics; however, there are three things that make this book unique. First, the author started writing this book when he was 19 and completed the first draft when he was 24. The content is derived from first hand, recent experiences and lessons learned by a peer who became successful at a very early age. Second, all of the most important topics and issues affecting the outcome of young adults' future are brought together under one cover. This book covers having the right attitude, lifestyle, how to decide on a career, gain the education you need, obtaining experience, starting a career, buying a reliable car, moving out of your parent's house, and finally, starting a retirement plan. The end result is a pre-requisite for every young person who is just beginning to put his or her life together. It serves as the "Cliff Notes," for all other career and life planning resources available. Third, the advice and guidance in this book is not written in typical "self-help language." The content is blunt and sometimes downright crude, but it speaks the language of young adults.
