With the Common Core State Standards requiring that young adults read across an assortment of texts within the same genre or theme, these exciting biographical volumes engage readers in critical thinking about science concepts, the writing process, and placing the featured science writers' works in historical context. These books offer an innovative way to incorporate nonfiction literature into the classroom and give students opportunities to make comparisons of these writers' sources, styles, and perspectives. The six scientists Einstein, Asimov, Sagan, Goodall, Hawking, and Tyson whose writings are the heart of this collection cover the late nineteenth century to today.
