Believing with Cardinal Newman that "the present is a text and the past its interpretation," Fr Jungmann explains liturgical worship in the Early Church to the time of Gregory the Great. From this foundation, the reader is led to an understanding of how present liturgical form developed. The early days of the Christian Church were days of fervor; people lived Christian lives and prayed in Christian fashion. The authenticity of their lives and customs found visible proof in nineteenth-century excavations of the catacombs, in new discoveries of papyrus rolls and fragments, in musty volumes made accessible by the libraries of ancient Eastern monasteries.
