In an age of conformity brought on by huge cult-like corporations and ubiquitous social media is there still a road less traveled one might choose to follow? How better to confront the thought control of the 21st century than by consulting history's seven great freethinking philosophers? We live in a time of stereotypical ignorance: "Stoics lack emotion and empathy," "Epicureans seek pleasure to the extreme," "Christians have narrow minds and oppose diversity," and "Muslims value blind faith over reason." Seven Great Freethinking Philosophers refutes these, and other, modern myths by detailing how seven great minds fought against conformity in their own ages and left us an inheritance of thought, now almost forgotten, fundamental to such things as human dignity, the scientific method, social diversity, academic and religious freedom, authentic feminism, and our ability to have empathy toward others. Based upon "Half-Hours With The Free Thinkers" yet with brand new selections on Augustine, Averroes, and Edith Stein this new version of a classic is a must read for all current, or aspiring, freethinkers.
